Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski has not been identified in a single communiqué since Dec. 13 as the leader of the Communist Party, a position he inherited in October. He is instead called the chairman of the Military Council for National Salvarion. It is almost as if the party post were a public liability.

In all the operations to dislodge strikers from factories that Westem journalists have learned about, the army has played a secondary, backup role. Sometimes army tanks are used to break down factory gates and then the soldiers fall back to let the special riot policemen enter to confront the workers. The security police, who are widely detested, are more reliable than the conscripted army. But the strategy also allows the authorities to perpetuate the notion that the soldiers are peacemakers not strike-breakers. If the army fired on workers people would turn against it quickly. Poisoned Candy

Pope Again Backs Solidarity

VATICAN CITY - Pope John Paul II, making his clearest call yet for the continued existence of the Polish free trade union movement, Soli-darity, said Friday it belonged to the heritage of Poland's workers. To avoid any ambiguity, the Vatican press office spelled out the word Solidarnose in capital letters, with quotation marks, in the official text of his New Year's homily in St. Peter's. "Workers have the right to set up autonomous trade unions, the rule of which is to guard their social, family and individual rights," the pope

"Solidarnose belongs to the actual patrimony of the workers of my country, and I would also say, of other nations," he said.

Public Discussion

The authorities on Thursday announced a series of proposed price increases in which the cost of many basic foodstuffs would be more than trebled. The announcement said the proposals would be open to public discussion. It did not specify when the increases would go into effect.

Publication of the proposed increases indicated that the martial law authorities were determined to go ahead with unpopular aspects of economic reform. The Communist Party daily Trybuna Ludu quoted the state price commission as saying the in-creases were an integral part of economic reform and that through them it boped to reduce the gap between supply and demand and eliminate black marketeering.

Under the published proposals a kilo (2.2 pounds) of sugar would go up from 10.5 zlotys (33 cents) to 46 zlotys, butter would go up from 17 Ziotys to 60 Ziotys and one kilogram of pork from 90 zlotys to 360

The price of coal for private users would go up from 550 zlotys to 2,000 zlotys a ton and central heating charges would be doubled. Average carnings in Poland are about 1,000 zlotys per month. Although the dollar is worth 31 zlo-

[The lifeboatmen halted work Thursday to protest legal restrictions on the amount of money families of the victims could receive from a charity drive on their behalf.]

3,000 Rescue Missions

The Royal National Lifeboat Institution is totally independent of the government. Since it was founded in 1824, lifeboat men have saved more than 106,000 lives at sea, and they have paid the price: 272 have been lost in rescue op-

Last year, the service saved 1,215 persons from death at sea in the course of about 3.000 rescue missions, the highest total in five years. The service operates at about 250 stations, placed in such locations as Mumbles, in Wales; Amble, in northeast England, Buckle, in Scotland, and Bally Cotton, in Ireland.

Cmdr. Cooper said. "All our income comes from voluntary contributions." This year, he added, it cost about $30 million to run the insti-

The lifeboats range from 52-footers that cost 5700,000 each down to 16-foot inflatable boats that cost $7,000.

There are two main sources of income. One consists of legacies, trusts and special gifts from private donors; the other is made up of 2,000 local fund-raising chapters throughout Britain and Ireland. In the last 25 years, rescues have increased sharply, according to Cmdr. Cooper, because of the popularity of recreational boating. And lifeboats powered by the muscle of the oarsmen have given way to modern, self-righting craft powered by twin diesel engines.

For risking their lives, the volunteers are paid $6 for the first hour at sea and $2 for each subsequent hour.

When the alert was sounded at Mousehole on Dec. 19, it was coxswain Trevelyan Richards who noted that 43-year-old Nigel Brockman and his 17-year-old son, Neil, were among the volunteers. Mr. Richards turned the tech-ager away, saying "One member of each family is enough on a night like this."

PEKING — China has indicated that it was willing to reach an agreement with the United States on the difficult issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, but perhaps on terms ton difficult for the Reagan

"If China's sovereignty is ig-nored, there is no way to solve this question," the People's Daily said. It said that China was waiting for a response by the Reagan ad-ministration to its willingness to reach an agreement on the issue before the whole relationship is underwined.

"It is a pity that the U.S. government in the three years since it en-tered into diplomatic relations with China has failed to honor its commitment as it should," the newspaper said, referring to U.S. recognition of the Communist regime here as the sole legal govern-ment of all China — including Taiwan. This highly informative book is worth having for this chapter alone! But there's much, much more. Tips, rales and revealing information on wine buying, wine tasting, wine vocabulary and wine smobbery. In fact, it's a wholly new revelation of the wine world. A book you'll read and refer to for years to come and one that will increase your enjoyment and expertise. A super gift idea as well.

SICILIAN LIVES

By Danilo Dolci. Translated from the Italian by Justin Vitiello and Madeline Polidoro. 304 pp. Hard cover, $16.50; paper, $6.95. Pantheon, 201 East 50th Street, New York 10022.

Reviewed by John Leonard

SEVERAL months before he was shot to death, Mohandas K. Gandhi asked, "Is it the kindness of God or His irony that the flames do not consume me?" It is a wooder that Danilo Dolci, who is often called Sicily's Gandhi, has not been shot. Almost everybody else who tried to help Sicilian workers and peasants out of poverty and brutishness has been shot, usually by the Mafia, while the church oods and the police wink. Why oot Dolci, a troublemaker of the first order and not even a Sicilian to begin

He was an architecture student on the mainland. Experiencing a discrepancy between Bach in the concert hall and misery on the street, he joined a Christian commune in Tuscany; in-stead of taking a degree, he took care of war orphans and cleaned latrines. In 1952 he went to Trappeto, a fishing village in western Sicily. He has been there ever since, teaching school, organizing peasant and artisan cooperatives, agitating for bridges and dams, leading sit-ins and fasts and "strikesin-reverse." (A strike-in-reverse occurs when the unemployed, to dramatize their joblessness, begin public works without state authorization.)

Dolci also listens, which is why he is called the Oscar Lewis and Studs Terkel of Sicily. For 30 years he has written down what he hears and read it back to the teller. A story — a con-oection — is made; lives are rescued from silence. This isn't casual anthropology; it is documentation for what he rather unfortunately characterizes as "our growth process of conscientiz-ing." Before they can learn to trust one another, members of the Sicilian underclass must learn to credit their own experience, Before Dolci or any-one else can teach the children, the parents must agree on what's to be taught and how. Before there can be a trade union or a wine-producing collective, history must be recovered and the name of the enemy articulated. "Sicilian Lives" consists of several dozen, among thousands, of such articulations.

Lust for Revenge

The Marxist art critic and novelist John Berger bullies us in his foreword. Because we are likely to be Westerners steeped in the sin of abstract thinking, we are told in advance that we won't understand what the Sicili-ans are saying, the tragedy of their op-pression, their lust for revenge. Many Sicilians themselves apparently fail to grasp the dialectical imperative im-plicit in their recollections; only Berger knows for sure. Berger once wrote a oovel, "Pig Earth" along these abstract lines; it was as tedious as this foreword.

Dolci bullies, too. He will oot permit us to enjoy his stories. They are much too expressive, too perfect, to allow for aestheticizing." I find these strictures pointlessly severe. We listen and read for many reasons, and hear many things at once - wretchedness, dazzling intuition, cowardice, love, superstition, beauty, greed, transcend-ence and waste. Above all, waste. We can even figure out how Dolci must have prompted the speaker and shaped the speech, helping perfection along. Neither be nor Berger, however, owns Rosaria's story or Grandma

Medda's or Uncle Felice's. Listen, then, to fishermen, shepherds, priests, street cleaners, fixers of soccer games, wardens, healers, ma-sons, ragpickers, aristocrats, cardsharps, politicians, pickpockets, tenant farmers, barbers, fascists and robbers of tombs. Play canasta or Ziganet. Hunt snails, skin frogs and collect lead left over from target practice by the police. Desert the army, talk to goats, find yourself dead and dumped in a ditch because you thought they were serious about land reform. Fish for eels with a kitchen fork.

According to Vincenzo, "If there's no work you eat grass. You do any-thing if you're starving. You can't see anymore through your eyes." Vincenzo also tells us: "Once somebody threw a handful of confetti at me and I bit off his finger." According to Bas-tiano: "The kids look like little old men. Weather-beaten, downtrodden, hunched over from all the work. You can't tell if they're old men, kids or dwarfs." According to Grandma Medda, "If your man's sick you say, "Save my husband. Take one of my children." And if he's really sick, you pray: "Madonna, I lick your floor." Which is exactly, Dolci suggests, what a woman must do — go to the church and lick the floor.

Sarriddu goes into the army and can't talk to his lieutenant because he must stand at attention: "I just had to use my hands. You can't communicate without them. How can you stand there like a poker and talk to people? Your mouth means nothing without your hands." A friend of Placido's contemplates the murder of a leader and the silence of those who followed him; "Whoever serves the people feeds pigs." A priest explains that the church teaches "that damage to property is a mortal sin." A criminal thinks aloud about the stars: "There must be smoke with all that fire." And "at daybreak, they disap-pear. Like cows they go into their barn."

And so on, unto hearthreak, on an island the size of Switzerland populated by a million more people than live today in Norway. Only the grave robbers know anything of Sicily's ancient history; only Dolci seems unbroken, conviolent, among the children, listening, an architect of muscle and tongue, we ought to be grateful. What is it that he knows? He knows, I think, a great and simple truth put into words by the French economist and mathematician Antoine Augustin Cournot:

"The fact that we repeatedly fail in some venture merely because of chance is perhaps the best proof that chance is not the cause of our failure."

Teltscher Upsets McEnroe In Masters Championships

McEnroe muttered.

From Agency Dispatches
NEW YORK — Taking full advantage of a highly-confusing situation, Elliot Teltscher upset John McEnroe, 6-4, 6-1 Friday to remain to contention for a semifinal berth in the Grand Prix Masters tennis tournament.

McEnroe later said he was menrally unprepared to play since he bad been guaranteed the night be-fore that he had clinched the championship of his group in the round-robin format and the $30,000 bonus that goes with it.

"I asked the tournament direc-tor [Ray Benton] if there was any way I could lose the group and he said no way," McEnroe said. "So I went out to a show last night and was out late. I wanted to get away from tennis. I had wanted to work on my game today without having to worry about winning.

"It wasn't a matter of tanking. I wanted to win. I wouldn't want to throw $30,000 out the window. But my leg was bothering me today, it's tough to get over a night match and I'm not used to playing at ooe o'clock. That's the bottom line."

On Thursday, McEnroe defeated Jimmy Connors, 6-2, 7-5. The match was not close, at least not compared with some of their previous ones. But McEnroe's victory provided a sample of how tennis has changed as a spectator sport and why McEnroe oow dictates Disputes over line calls, foul language and gestures by the players, warnings against McEnroe for conduct and time violations and fans cheering the faults of both pros were as noticeable as the technical excellence of McEnroe's overpowering serve-and-volley game and Connors' aggressive passing shots.

McEnroe-Connors matches embody theater in contrast to the sport's once-staid image. Their banter, gestures, insults and antics before, during and after points do as much to excite spectators as some of their exquisite shots. How they respond to the crowd and officials in their assorted crises often reflects the tone of the match.

One linesman, Paul Sullivan, officially protested to the umpire when McEnroe kicked the wooden sides around his chair after a game. The umpire, Ken Siye, twice announced wrong scores and even went so far as to ask the lively crowd: "As a courtesy to the players, refrain from oohs and ahs during the point." "No one's allowed to breathe."

The second day of the eightplayer event began when Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia beat Guillermo Vilas, 6-4, 6-1, and then hinted afterward that he might consider tanking or intentionally losing, his final round-robin match on Friday if he were forced to play at night instead of in the afternoon. The match was scheduled in daylight but Lend's opponent, José-Luis Clerc, later withdrew be-cause of severe tendinitis in his left

The match was meaningless anyway since Lendi already clinched a semifinal berth while Clerc, beaten in both of his matches, had been

Teltscher beat Tanner, 4-6, 6-1, 6-4, on Thursday and Gernlaitis scored a 7-6, 6-1 victory over

"He may have to do it again this week," Connors said, when asked to comment on McEnroe's skillful tactics during Thursday night's match. "I'm not dead yet. I've just here the." been shot."

What pleased McEnroe most about Thursday's victory, aside from beating his closest American challenger, was his patience.

Conigliaro, Former Star of Red Sox, Has Massive Heart Attack at Age 37

BOSTON - Doctors have removed a balloon pump that was inserted to the heart of Tony Conigliaro, a former star with the Boston Red Sox, after he suffered a massive heart attack last weekend, hospital spokesmen said Thursday.

One spokesman said that Conigliaro's heart had improved but that doctors remained concerned about his level of consciousness. Conigliaro, 37, responded to pain but had not awakened enough to engage in conversation, the spokes-

But Hialeah has far more virtues than its pretty scenery. There is no more comfortable place to play the horses. A bettor can spend the af-ternoon sitting under a palm tree however, be must pay more attention to the Racing Form than to the flora, because no race meeting in America offers such challenges — and opportunities.

Because of Hialeah's allure, top stables from New York, Kentucky, Illinois and New Jersey come here for the winter to compete against resident Florida horses. The equine population is so large that Hialeah can offer 10 competitive 12-horse fields every day — along with nine exactas, four trifectas, a daily donble and a pick-six. It's a gamblers' paradise.

Don't Forget the Flag

The changes that have occurred in this area once would have seemed unthinkable. The center of South Florida's population has been moving steadily northward, and the affluent citizenry now lives in such communities as Holly-wood, Hallandale, Fort Lander dale and Boca Raton; Hislesh is convenient to none of them.

Shifting demographics have been hurring Hisleah for years, even before the influx of Cubans and Haitians and the high crime rate became subjects of national attention and intense local con-

the track was "too fast" and in-volved the risk of heavy injuries for the racers. "The track was safer than in

A Rugby Classic Turns 100

5-Nations Tournament Opens in Scotland

By Bob Donahue

EDINBURGH — An international championship kicks off Saturday for the 100th time. By a pure socident of scheduling, the opening match in 1982 is the same as the solitary 1871 match that started it all: Scotland vs. England in Edinburgh.

A thaw turned much of the city's snow to slush Thursday. For the 60,000 fans who slosh to Murrayfield Saturday, as for the millions who watch on television, 19th-century history won't be an urgent concern. A main concern will be whether Andy Irvine, Scotland's captain and fullback, is on target with his goal-kicking. Still, if the 1871 parallel is carried through, Scotland will win and the score will be 10-4.

The name of the game is Rugby football. Or rugger, rugby union, rugby; or even just football, with a sneer in the direction of the various heretical variants of the Bickering over footballing rules seems to have been a compulsive passime in England in the mid-19th century. The first big schism came in 1863, when soccer (association football: the dribbling code) and rugger (Rugby football: the handling code) split to go their hostile ways.

Breaks of the Game

Soccer soon accommodated professionalism, but rugby balked. So a second schism, in 1893, left the Rugby Football Union amputated of its northern clubs; they broke away to develop the 13-man game known as rugby league, which is mainly professional and has downs.

Rugby is a 15-man amateur game with no downs. While it fussed along. North Americans were evolving the 11-man game that Britons today call gridiron, or American football. Americans call it just football, of course. It has downs. Its first recorded professional game was played in 1895.

Communications were so slow at the turn of the century that separate development was probably inevitable on opposite sides of the Atlantic. Even in Australia, rugby is hard-pressed to survive today in com-petition with Australian rules football, rugby league and soccer.

The Challenge Ahead

It is tempting, though, to wonder whether the RFU might have kept the upper hand had it had been able to compromise on money in 1893. Administrators in the eight countries that govern the game worldwide—Australia, England, France, Ireland, New Zealand, Scotland, South Africa and Wales—expect a similar challenge in the 1980s from dynamic elements whose loss, again, would be dangerous.

Two events of note occurred in 1906. In San Francisco, the Canton (Ohio) Bulldogs threw American professional football's first recorded forward pass, an innovation that would accentuate the difference and thus the international isolation of the American game. In Paris, England played its first game with France, thus introducing new blood into rugby's stuffy but enduring family, the French have since recruited almost every country on the Continent, including the Communist ones.

England and Scotland had played alone for four years when Ireland joined them in 1875, followed by Wales in 1881 and France in 1906. A 10-match program was played in full for the first time in 1910. The International Championship, as some still call it, became the Five Nations Championship.

Aside from interruptions for the two world wars (five years from 1915 through 1919 and seven from 1940) through 1940 the championship has been 1940 through 1946), the championship has been played every winter, or 99 times: 49 times with fewer than 10 matches, 50 times with 10. Since the resumption in 1947, the only missed games have been in 1972, when bomb scares dissuaded Scotland and Wales from playing in Dublin.

Weather Prolongs Schedule

This year, for the first time since the schedule was condensed into five Saturdays in 1974, six Saturdays will be needed because snow in Wales and Ireland has Dublin. The 750th championship match will come a land-Wales and Scotland-France; March 20, Wales-Scotland and France-Ireland.

Wales has been on top of the heap since the war, with 85 victories and 11 draws io 139 championship matches, for a victory percentage of .651. Next come France at .575, England at .486, Ireland at .438 and Scotland at .349.

Wales and France have increased their ascendancy in recent years, and England has been strong since the late '70s. Grand slams (sweeps of all four matches) were won by Wales in 1976 and 1978, England in 1980, and France in 1977 and 1981. The three annual games among this trio are usually the hig ones.

But Scotland has bome advantage and improved forwards going for it Saturday. Two out of three championship games are won by the home team. If Irvine, who turned 30 in September, can kick his goals, Bill Beaumont's Englishmen are unlikely to keep the Calcutta Cup that goes with the senior comprise's annual match. tries' annual match.

Sold Out for Months

The cup, a heavy silver tankard with an elephant on its lid, was donated in 1878 by the Calcutta Football Clob, which was disbanding and had residual rupees to melt down. "The great and rapid development of Polo has proved a fatal blow to Football here," wrote the club's treasurer.

So rugby has oever been secure. Right now, European administrators are casting jaundiced glances ahead at soccer's World Cup extravaganza due in Spain in June and July. France wants a world rugby championship of comparable prestige. At stake are Europe's television-watching youngsters.

Meanwhile, the five Five Nations stadiums have been sold out for months and the television audiences will be big, as usual. This is a good time, many think, for rugby to shed its image of a lumbering, slogging brawl between packs of icebox-shaped forwards in which the mob with the better kicker of penalty goals

Irvine agrees. "If it were up to me," he said in a posts at all." Instead there would be loss of running

How to Get a Big Tip

Americans' greatest phobias, appeared at our resort hotel, and I "Fear of Tipping." Roosey came out against tipping, but he admitted he didn't have the cerve to lead an anti-tipping movement.

Coleman McCarthy, the columnist for The Washington Post, then wrote that Roocey didn't have in lead the onti-tipping movement in the U.S. because it already had lead-waiters and cah drivers, but golf caddies as well. I am happy to jnin in the discus-sion because in an earlier life I worked as a bellboy. While Rooney and McCarthy can cry about the indignities beaped on the uppers, I can talk about the joys of being a "tippee."

First of all, for every defiant McCarthy willing to ignore the practice of tipping there are 10 Rooneys quaking in their boots because no matter what they've given as a gratuity, they're never sure if it was enough.

In my day, those of us who al-ways had our hands out, could spot a deadbeat like McCarthy before be even got out of a taxi. He was easy to identify because you could hear the cah driver cursing him as he drove away. Another clue was that a McCarthy-type always tried to carry his own bag into the lobby, and after checking in, attempted to lug it by himself up to the room. In the well-run bellhop corps to which I belonged each man took his turn checking people in or out. The last man on the list was stuck with emptying the ashtrays in the lobby and attending to the needs of a McCarthy. You did these menial tasks because sooner or lat-

was the lucky bellhop, I would rusb out and say, "Good day, sir." Intimidated, he would immediately hand me a quarter. I would carry his bags and escort him smartly to the desk. After registering, the desk clerk would ring a chime, give me a key and I would say, "Please follow me, and don't worry. I have change for a $10 bill."

An old bell captain, from whom I had learned the profession, told me, "When checking in a couple, there are two kinds you will be dealing with. The first will be married. Don't waste too much time on them, because the size of the tip has already been established in the busband's mind. But every once in a while you will luck out and get an unmarried couple. At this moment, money is no nbject for them to get into the room and to get you out. Stall for time, checking the windows, the closets and the water in the bathroom. The longer you remain, the more nervous the man will become and fically in desperation, he'll shove a fistful of money in your hand if you just agree to leave."

* * * "How will I know if the couple is married or not?" "A married man usually flops on the bed first, and his wife always checks the closets to see if there are enough hangers."

"And an unmarried couple?"
"The unmarried woman usually starts combing her hair in froot of the mirror, and the unmarried man always makes sure the bolt on the door is working."

My tutor gave me ooe other piece of advice, "If the couple is unmarried, wait 20 minutes, and then bring them a bucket of ice. You'll earn the fastest five bucks you ever made in your life." No need to go into other secrets of the trade, but suffice to say that the Andy Rooneys of this world don't have a prayer against people who are used to being tipped for serving the public. The oext time you watch "60 Minutes" on television, take a close look at Andy Rooney, and you'll know why no ooe in the hotel, restaurant or taxi business is afraid of him. All you have to do as a waiter is pour soup on him, and he'll shove a 10-spot into the palm of your band.

Notes on His 'Friends,' the '60s, Theater, Arthur Penn Notes on His 'Friends,' the '60's, Ineater, Violence and the 'Rapture of the Shallow'

DARIS - Arthur Penn is a major U.S. director who has made only 10 feature films, ranging from "The Left Handed Gun."
(1958), a Freudian view of Billy the Kid that died in the United States but was resuscitated and canonized by Belgian critics, to his picaresque study of the frootier, "Little Big Man." Two films of the mid-70s, "Night

Moves" and "The Missouri Breaks,' sank almost without a trace: "Four Friends," his new picture which is now opening in Europe, was hailed by The New York Times as one of the 10 best of 1981.

Penn's best known works are "Bonnie and Clyde" (1967) and "Alice's Restaurant" (1969), remarkable films that between them said just about all that has to he said about the 1960s. So it's rather odd that The New York Times critic would praise "Four Friends" as "the best film yet made about the '60s."

"Four Friends," says Penn, is not a film about the '60s: it is a film set in the '60s, which is quite a different thing. He is a very nice, trim man in a tweed jacket, bouncy and at the same time reflective. Two words he uses a ln1 are "nifty" and "experiential."

'Bizarre' Comments

People have said bizarre things about "Four Friends," Penn said, "They've said it was filled with despair, they've said I'm renoucing the people I embraced in 'Alice's Restaurant.'

"It's quite the opposite, it's just that the people in 'Four Friends' are from a different part of the world. It's not about the counterculture but about living in mainstream America in the '60s."

Based on a parily autobiographical script by 38-year-old Steve Tesich, who also wrote "Breaking Away," "Four Friends" is about growing up in an Indiana steel town. The central character, Danilo, is, like Tesich, a Yugoslav who comes to the United States at the age of 12 and embraces the American dream with a stubborn and uncomprehend-ing passion. He and his three best friends graduate from high school in 1961 and try to make sense of their lives in a dangerous and reckless decade. Danilo realizes the American dream at its most abundant; he marries an beiress, the wedding scene ends in violence so borrible that the viewer is nearly numb for the rest of the film. "People are going to say the same old Penn violence," Penn said with a small shrug, referring to the shock caused by the killings in "Bonnie and Clyde." The violence in his films is especially hornble for the simple rea-son that it is filled with pain.

"The wedding was in Steve's original script so it can't be blamed on me. We were talking about what is the experiential equivalent of the Kennedy assassination on a small personal level. That's it." The violence in "Bonnie and Clyde" was inspired by the Vietnam war body counts discussed nightly oo U.S. TV. "Bonnie and Clyde" was thought of by many as a period film — Warner Bros. even offered to let Penn use black-and-white film and were surprised to be turned down - but if it was set in the '30s it was about the '60s. "Not to get grandiose about it, it had meta-phorie implications," Penn said. And "Four Friends," while set in the '60s, is really a comment on today. "If I were pressed I'd say it's a film that says wake up, come out of this long sleep! The remarkable thing about the American dream is not the illusions you have but the fact that you can choose your destiny. Freedom of choice is choose your destiny. Freedom of choice is the American dream."

During the long sleep of the 1970s Penn took five years off from filmmaking. "I couldn't find the tone of the country. The sense that people had in the '60s that they were effectively in control of the country was taken away. Government was being conducted behind closed doors."

He used those years to direct plays, teach at the Actors' Studio and spend time with his growing children while his wife began a new career as a family therapist. They bve in New York and have a summer place in Massachu-setts next to Arlo Guthrie's.

Born in Philadelphia in 1922 (the photo-grapher Irving Penn is his brother), Arthur Penn worked in television in its "Golden Age," the 1950s, and after making "The Left Handed Gun" became a leading Broadway director with "Two for the Seesaw." He is one of the few directors who can move with equal skill between the stage and films.

More Interest in Film

Broadway today, he says, is making straight serious drama impossible by such economy cuts as reducing rehearsal time to 3½ weeks. Students in his Actors' Studio classes, he says, are more interested in film.

"I remember when James Dean was at the Studin be wanted desperately to do a play. Now they want to he in films." They have developed a "film" acting style. "They tend to he a little guarded, they have the misconception that it has to he small, which I don't subscribe to. It has to be as vital and as deeply felt as acting for the stage."

Penn is very much a city man but only one of his films - "Mickey One" - is set in a city. He tends towards an epic view of America: even his small films are very big.

"Yes, I bave a predisposition to that. I think it's just experiential, the films I like have that kind of sweep. Maybe it's a reaction to all those years in live television when everything we did was on a little set that big." His hands enclose a timy square.

"I really like that outside look of America even when it's kind of horrible. I've been toy-

Director Penn: The experiential nifty.

ing with a film about strip-mining, which is really the nther side of the moon." Penn likes to work closely with his writer: on "Four Friends" Tesich collaborated at every stage. "It was rather nifty," Penn said. "The Chase," written by Lillian Hellman, was less nifty. "That was a painful experience, the script got changed by the producers. She hasn't quite forgiven me. She hasn't forgiven me," Penn amended. "There are no quites with I illian" quites with Lillian."

He has worked a lot with the playright William Gibson and next season on Broadway will direct Gibson's sequel to "The Mir-acle Worker," "Monday after the Miracle," Penn describes himself as compulsive and says his compulsiveness comes out more on a film set than on a stage.

"I was thinking the other day about film directing. It is, among other things, the world's biggest playpen. You get to employ all those baby attitudes from stamping you feet to practically wetting your pants. You get kind of shameless in making people feel guilty without feeling guilty yourself. That's one of the luxuries, you are exonerated in advance,

"Cousteau has a line about the rapture of the deep. This is the rapture of the shallow," Penn said, It's not behavior one can get away with in the theater.

"The theater is much too private, It's too small an instrument. To have a good tantrum you need at least 20 people," he said.

barren desert of southern Algeria where he who had been stranded with his co-driver and mechanic for six days during the Paris-Dakar motor raily. "I hope this is the last of Mark's motor racing," said his twin sister Carol, writing in the Daily Express of the Thatcher family's waiting ordeal. "Mum can do without the hassle." Mrs. Thatcher said her "heart stopped" when she realized Mark was missing. Her busband Denis, who had flown to Algeria to help in the air search for his son, also made his views clear when asked if Mark would rally again: "I jolly well bope not — not here." Mark, how-ever, indicated he would resist constraints on his dangerous sport, telling reporters: "I am contracted to drive cars next year and that is what I shall do." The ordeal in the Sahara began when his car broke an axle. . . Princess Anne, the queen's 31-year-old daughter, helped take fuel to a snow-bound elderly villager, The princess heard from a neighbor that 75-year-old Dorothy Holbrook was stranded at her cottage in the hamlet of Nag's Head, 100 miles northwest of London and not far from the Gloucestershire mansion where Anne lives with her husband and two children. "What the princess basically said was 'Give me hour and I will be back. She was as good as her word, said neighbor Ray Corton, recalling the incident, which he said happened earlier this week. The princess, her bodyguard and parish council chairman Donald Teakle took Anne's Land Rover to a coal depot, loaded up 330 pounds of coal and drove it a mile through the snows to Mrs. Holbrook's home. The princess helped lift the bags of coal onto a sled, which was pulled to the widow's door. "I was shocked when I heard Princess Anne was bringing my coal," Mrs. Holbrook said.
